Editor's note, woman's day special

Happy women's month!

A special month calls for a special edition. What makes this edition especially special for our platform, is that it connects women based all over the world of different ages. Not just 45+ artists. On this day, we made an exception! Our quick and dirty call generated over sixty entries of artists who all submitted works that are related to womanhood in different ways. Going through all the different artistic interpretations on this topic that made their way to our inbox, we felt touched and inspired by all we had learned and that the artists had shared with us through their visual and written languages. Thank you very much to everyone who submitted and taught us something new, who showed something personal and beautiful. We hope you enjoy this edition, this day and this month.

Laurence De Valmy

French American artist Laurence de Valmy invites the viewer to reflect on art history and the way in which social media shapes art today. In her series "POST", to which both featured works belong, she depicts iconic paintings as instagram posts, playing with her conception of originality. De Valmy's paintings are completed by a 'comment section' in which artists and other emblematic characters engage in humorous conversations. The goal of her work is, in her own words "to share about the stories behind the artworks, the connections between the artists and to make my viewers consider these iconic artworks with a renewed interest by replacing them in the context of their creation."
